KEY PERFORMANCE INDICATORS

SUMMARY

U.S. hotel capital markets activity is increasingly being shaped by scale and selectivity rather than breadth. Over the past 12 months, roughly $24–25 billion in hotel assets traded across more than 3,500 transactions, involving about 309,000 rooms. While transaction counts remain well below peak-cycle levels, aggregate dollar volume has recovered more meaningfully, pushing the average deal size higher even as many smaller assets continue to trade.

Pricing signals reflect this mix effect. Average sale prices per room sit in the low six figures, but that headline masks a wide dispersion driven by asset class and market. Luxury and upper-upscale transactions continue to post materially higher per-room pricing, while midscale and economy assets account for a majority of deals but a smaller share of total dollars. Cap rates cluster around the low-to-mid 9% range nationally, with tighter pricing evident in high-barrier coastal and resort markets and wider yields prevailing across secondary and tertiary locations.

Geographically, transaction volume remains concentrated. A relatively small group of major markets–led by New York, Phoenix, Orlando, San Francisco, and Miami–captured a disproportionate share of total dollar volume.

Broker contacts continue to indicate that a lower interest-rate environment, paired with a more realistic bid-ask spread, should provide the catalyst the industry has been waiting for to unlock greater sales volume in 2026. Admittedly, this has been the refrain for the past two years, but 2026 could indeed mark the point where transaction activity finally accelerates.

Noteworthy trades were concentrated in the luxury segment, reinforcing the prevailing conviction that "luxury is the only place to hide." Early in 2026, Host Hotels and Resorts sold two Four Seasons hotels, in Orlando and Jackson Hole, for around $1.1 billion to a group affiliated with Michael Dell. In addition, all eyes are on the potential deal to sell the Waldorf Astoria in New York, which only recently reopened after a multi-billion dollar renovation.

One significant distressed transaction that did close was the sale of the Hilton San Francisco Union Square and Parc 55. The combined purchase price for the roughly 3,000 rooms–representing nearly 10% of the city's inventory–was $408 million, reflecting a steep 76% discount from the approximately $1.5 billion appraised value. San Francisco is, once again, on investors' minds and, not to be outdone, Blackstone acquired the Four Seasons San Francisco for a reported $130 million, aiming to capitalize on what it views as improving market fundamentals.

CMBS origination volumes remained solid at just under $18 billion. While this total is nearly 25% lower than in 2024, the number of loans increased by more than 100, signaling a healthy and active CMBS landscape.
